If a student marginally fails only one of the seven foundations of legal knowledge subjects, the SRA may, at its discretion, in exceptional circumstances, condone the single failure and confirm the award of a QLD. (A student is considered to have marginally failed a foundation subject if they attain a mark of not more than 5% lower than the QLD pass mark of 40%.) For this reason, students are generally required to re-sit a foundation subject rather than compensate a fall in the compensatable range. Furthermore, the PAB rarely compensates a non-core subject in Yrs 1 and 2 because if a student were to fail a foundation Yr 3 subject the SRA would be unlikely to exercise their discretion to award the student a QLD. 'Condonement' of a failed mark usually means to overlook or permit it, allowing a student to proceed; 'compensation' implies a marginally failed mark (usually within 2-3% of a pass grade) has been raised to pass level because of balancing strengths elsewhere in the academic portfolio. A problem arises if it is possible for a student to progress to the award of part 1 or part 2 without achieving a pass mark in all academic modules identified as mapping against the validation criteria. The RIBA therefore strongly recommends that validated modules opt for a no condonement clause in all modules contributing to achievement of the Graduates Attributes and General or Professional Criteria. Since all the MArch modules are mapped against the the Part 2 criteria, then all students need to pass all modules to fully meet criteria."	5/25/2023	No compensation on any modules

UNYT awards the MSc Computer Science to students who complete successfully according to the UNYT aught regulations. The agreement with UNYT allows the University to award an MSc provided that that students meet essential requirements for a UK award. Students are registered with UoG but no records of marks are kept in Banner. The university appoints an external examiner for the programme who goes to UNYT to moderate work and who sits on a PAB held at Greenwich where decisions to award a UoG MSc are made.		UNYT are to supply the UoG with the GPA to award.
